Breathing Membrane — Between Body and Surface —

My lacquer sculpture is a practice of "tactile becoming" that emerges through the accumulation of sense of touch and time.

Using the dry lacquer-Kanshitsu technique, I layer hemp cloth and lacquer multiple times, then remove the internal core material. A thin, yet self-sustaining, almost spiritual membrane emerges.

Lacquer as a material stimulates my instincts, guiding my consciousness to its primal state and driving me to create. From the jet black, a fluid, rising structure forms, as if surging from the abyss. From the vermilion, a sensual expression is evoked, as if the traces of life have been etched into it.

The surface is not merely an outer layer. It is a "breathing membrane" connecting the inside and outside, body and space. Through the process of repeated layering and abrading, the work incorporates light, inviting the viewer into the realm of the unconscious

Mit dem Fluss des Wassers, dem Blick auf die Natur und alles,
was sie umspült, erschaffe ich eine Metapher für die Natur an sich.

Within the flow of water, to view the world of nature and all that flows around it, I am creating a metaphor to nature itself.
